

Abstract

The invention concerns a method and apparatus for rearrangement of products stacked on transport elements and replacement of transport elements, in which the stack is grasped and stabilized at least on two opposite sides by clamping jaws, in that a foot element carrying the transport element can be pivoted out and the transport element removed from under the stack, while this stack is held in the upright or sloped position.